FULL TEXT

ANNOUNCER: "Good evening, and welcome to Campus Press Conference. In these Wednesday night broadcasts, representatives of college newspapers interview people who make the news.

"Our moderator is Anthony Preizendorf, City Hall reporter for the New York Post. And now, to introduce the panel and tonight's guest, here is Mr. Preizendorf."

ANTHONY PREIZENDORF: "Thank you.

"Our guest this evening is Sylvan Fox, Pulitzer Prize winning author of The Unanswered Questions about President Kennedy's Assassination. During our interview tonight, we'll be discussing some of those questions still unanswered after almost three years, and the significance of the recent decision by the Kennedy family to turn over important autopsy information to the national archives.

"Here, to interview Mr. Fox are Joseph Field, assistant editor of the Daily Princetonian, Andrew Kagan, managing editor of NYU's Washington Square Journal, and Tom Ackerman, an editor for the City College Campus.

"Sylvan, welcome to Campus Press Conference. And, now, to begin our questioning, here is Tom Ackerman."

TOM ACKERMAN: "Mr. Fox, I suppose you could divide the state of critics of the Warren Commission Report into two broad categories. Those who merely cast doubt about the completeness of the report, and those who seriously put forward alternate assassination theories. Which category do you think you would classify yourself?"

SYLVAN FOX: "Well, I'm not sure that I agree with your breakdown. I think I would divide the critics, also in two categories.
